

Home Incident Response and Recovery Checklist

By: Joseph Gonzalez

Best For	When something already went wrong
Use	Use this during account theft, malware worries, strange charges, or device compromise.
Inside	First actions, safe recovery, reporting, and family communication steps.

For educational use. Share with family members, caregivers, teachers, and community groups. The goal is calm action, not fear.

Home Incident Response and Recovery Checklist

Use this guide as a calm checklist. Read one section, take one action, and come back later for the next step.

First, stay calm

A security problem feels stressful, but fast panic can make things worse. Work from a clean device when possible and take one step at a time.

Do this first

- Disconnect the affected device from the internet.
- Do not type passwords on a device you think is compromised.
- From a clean device, change your email password.
- Turn on two step verification.
- Check bank and credit card accounts for strange activity.
- Take screenshots of messages, charges, or warnings.

Do not do this

- Do not give remote access to a surprise caller.
- Do not share login codes.
- Do not pay with gift cards.
- Do not delete evidence before taking screenshots.
- Do not blame the person who reported the problem.

Recovery steps

- Sign out of other sessions.
- Run updates and a built in security scan.
- Restore files from backup if needed.
- Call the bank if money or card details may be involved.
- Report scams to the correct service or agency.

Español

Un problema de seguridad puede dar miedo, pero actuar con pánico puede empeorarlo. Usa un dispositivo limpio cuando sea posible.

- Desconecta el dispositivo afectado.
- No escribas contraseñas en un dispositivo sospechoso.
- Cambia la contraseña del correo desde un dispositivo limpio.
- Activa verificación en dos pasos.

- Toma capturas de evidencia.
 - No des acceso remoto a una llamada sorpresa.
-

Reminder: Stop, Check, Ask. If something feels urgent, strange, or scary, slow down and verify with a trusted source.